

Types of Governments

Anarchy: No government nor laws.

Democracy: The people or their elected representatives run the country and create the laws.

Direct Democracy: Rule directly by the people.

Representative Democracy: Rule by the people through their elected representatives.

Dictatorship: The country is ruled by a single leader.

Monarchy: The country is ruled by a queen or king.

Republic: The rulers are elected by the people.

Theocracy: Rule by a deity (god) through clergy or religious laws.

Totalitarian: The country is ruled by one political party.

Transitional: The country is changing from one type of government to another.

Note: There are other ways to classify governments. The types mentioned here are the ones you will see most often in K-12 textbooks.

Types of Governments

Anarchy: No government nor laws.

Democracy: The people or their elected representatives run the country and create the laws.

Direct Democracy: Rule directly by the people.

Representative Democracy: Rule by the people through their elected representatives.

Dictatorship: The country is ruled by a single leader.

Monarchy: The country is ruled by a queen or king.

Republic: The rulers are elected by the people.

Theocracy: Rule by a deity (god) through clergy or religious laws.

Totalitarian: The country is ruled by one political party.

Transitional: The country is changing from one type of government to another.

Note: There are other ways to classify governments. The types mentioned here are the ones you will see most often in K-12 textbooks.

Types of Governments

Anarchy: No government nor laws.

Democracy: The people or their elected representatives run the country and create the laws.

Direct Democracy: Rule directly by the people.

Representative Democracy: Rule by the people through their elected representatives.

Dictatorship: The country is ruled by a single leader.

Monarchy: The country is ruled by a queen or king.

Republic: The rulers are elected by the people.

Theocracy: Rule by a deity (god) through clergy or religious laws.

Totalitarian: The country is ruled by one political party.

Transitional: The country is changing from one type of government to another.

Note: There are other ways to classify governments. The types mentioned here are the ones you will see most often in K-12 textbooks.